Barbour writes, for example, of the worldfamed dean of Cuban naturalists, Don Carlos de la Torre, who introduced him to the Cuban way of living and to the fine flavor of the local fresh-water prawns. Don Carlos, by the way, is so expert a conchologist that he can hold his hand behind his back, roll the tiny land snails in which the island abounds in his sensitive fingers, and name them correctly one by one, sight unseen. Barbour is never more lyrical than when he writes of food, especially sea food--mangrove oysters, moorish crabs, and fishes with tongue-twisting names. He applauds Cuban ingenuity in preparing cooling fruit drinks or refrescos, and adds slyly: The occasional addition of a little good rum works no harm. With his final statement many globe-trotters will agree: I add...
