This item is printed on demand - Print on Demand Neuware - Master's Thesis from the year 2011 in the subject Business economics - Banking, Stock Exchanges, Insurance, Accounting, grade: B, Oxford University, language: English, comment: Congratulation for a well done paper , abstract: From the start of commercial banking since 1970s Islamic banking and finance has revealed progressive expansion over the globe. Pakistan, as one of the largest Muslim nation in the world, has taken some policies and established some strategies in order to develop Islamic banking industry in the country. Islamic banking, like commercial banking, faces a number of implications that may influence their operational performance. One of such implications is liquidity risk that provides extra features in the situation of Islamic banking. Both the Sharia rules and the international standards of banking propose that banks must have some strong management policies concerning to implication of liquidity risk, such as a liability committee and reactive asset, system of internal control and useful information, and techniques for managing deposits to decrease liquidity on-demand, in order to manage the liquidity risk and its implications. The purpose of this study, therefore, is to analyze the liquidity risk management and its implications in Islamic banking. This objective is fulfilled through the case study of Meezan Bank in Pakistan Islamic banking industry. The methods of data collection and analysis in this study include a combination of qualitative and quantitative research methods to reach the aims and objectives of this research. Additionally, the primary data with the help of questionnaire survey was also collected with the intention of understating the real practices and implications of liquidity risk management. It was examined from the perspectives of depositors of Islamic banking and Islamic bankers in order to provide...
